

I understand that :The Federal Communications Commission is again available for comments regarding your proposed "Do Not Call" rule.
and that: The(FCC) is considering a proposal that could diminish the protections I receive from Indiana's Telephone Privacy law.
And that The FCC is considering preempting state Telephone Privacy laws in favor of adopting one lower national standard.
While the legal arguments about preemption are complicated, the practical result could mean that I will receive more unwanted telemarketing calls.

Also Should the FCC try to preempt state law,I could receive unwanted calls from some companies that I have previously done business with...credit card companies, phone companies, and anybody else that considers me an "existing customer."
I think you should leave Indiana's law alone.

I am commenting on proceeding:
"02-278".

The following are what I want considered in this note:

- That the FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections.

- How Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has improved your time at home:

My phone is silent now except for the personal and business contacts I now want and request. I want this status to stay the same. I like my privacy and ability to control who has my phone number and when.

- How effective Indiana's law has been:

"I used to receive 200 calls per week, now I only receive one a month"! The fact that I think those who want to have this kind of nuisance calling should be the one's required to do all this kind of stuff. I should tell you I want to be called and on a calling list and that you can sell rent share and whatever my personal and private information.

I should not be expected to have to take these extraordinary steps to stop unwanted callers from using my phone for their business purpose to sell me something. I can make those contacts on my own when and if I choose to.
Please do not modify anything that will put my phone back at risk to be used the "old" way.

Thank you for your attention to this message.

I want to ensure the success of our Telephone Privacy program for many years to come.

Sincerely,
Ms. Christine Hotte
